LOCAL MEN TO LOSE STOCK HELD IN FAKE AUTO CONCERN

According to dispatches received today from Washington, D. C., the government has issued a fraud order against the International Automobile League, Inc., the International Automobile League Tire company and A. C. Bidwell, president of both companies. An investigation has been conducted by the postal department concerning the affairs of Bidwell and his companies at the request of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in their campaign for "truth in advertising."

The above will be interesting reading for a large number of Richmond people who are members of Bidwell's so-called International Automobile League. Some years ago a man by the name of Mason came to Richmond and accepted a membership from $15 to $100 for membership and stock in his organization and gave out the information that the tire company was contemplating the construction of a large factory in Richmond. However, after working the town for as much money as could be obtained, the agent moved on to other fields and nothing more was heard of the matter.

Bidwell conducted some sort of an accessory house for automobiles and had a branch agency in Los Angeles and San Francisco, but members of his companies soon ascertained that they were being duped and dropped out after making a trial order for goods.

NEWPORT GAYETY

NEWPORT, Aug. 5.—The social top spins merrily as usual at this time of year, and popular members of the smart set find their time fully occupied. The dog show at Casino, and the Tennis Tournament, are especially popular day events, where society is always well represented, while several prominent hostesses have inaugurated a series of week-end dinners followed by dancing, bridge, or other popular diversions.

SUMMER FINEERY

Day clothes usually have a sport note, due largely to the liking for gay silk sweaters, matching hats and smaller accessories. Short skirts are quite as much worn by the women past forty as by the junior contingent. In fact a back view gives little indication whether one is viewing the girl or her grandmother, especially if the older woman has the slim straight figure that many women succeed in retaining. On the beach, where never before have people disported themselves in such elaborate sea clothes, the older women, as a rule, are more conservative, and therefore better dressed for bathing than the girl who dons furbelows in the surf. Pretty Japanese parasols are very much used on the sands, everywhere, and are picturesque and becoming as well as comfortable and shady. Bathing capes are as much in favor as any of the more elaborate garments in ample circular cut that threatens to displace coats from fashionable prominence. The most sensible, and not by any means least attractive bathing capes, are built of cotton terry cloth in plain colors or of the broad fabric familiar to men's bath robes. Ratines pass for dress purposes have obtained a new lease of favor for these salt water wraps, and nothing is too gay in color, or too pronounced in contrast for this use.

FOR EVENING WEAR

For evening wear one sees capes of black satin, trimmed in flounces of pleated tulle banded with the silk, and with huge convertible collars having points weighted with long tassels. Taffeta capes are made with a yoke effect, the lower part attached with a series of up-standing ruffles, all edged with gold embroidery, the usual adjustable collar similarly trimmed. Wool angora cloth in soft pastel tints lined with flowered silk makes pretty cozy wraps, and these are often finished with matching mufflers weighted with balls of shirred silk or satin at the ends.

WHITE SATIN CAPES

White satin capes are especially well worn over evening frocks. One special model that fits closely over the shoulders and falls in simple graceful lines, has a very well designed collar from which long scarf ends sweep in particularly graceful lines. Flaring crisp wraps of unlined failles and taffetas still hold their place, but as the season progresses, clinging effects which lack nothing in fullness are very well endorsed. Transparent wraps of tulle or net, and cream lace affairs lined with metal gauze are among the most elaborate seen here, and the lighter texture of the material that makes the garment, the heavier the trimming. Fur and marabout, and plush and velvet bands and collars each lend the incongruous touch reckoned especially smart.

McCall Design

HATS IN ENDLESS VARIETY

The well turned out young woman this season is in great need of a special hat trunk, for her hats are both numerous, and for the most part wide spreading affairs not easily packed in any ordinary receptacle. Ribbon, and various applique ornaments vie with painted embellishments, to make the hat picturesque, or, outre, according to fancy. When every style screams, nothing seems too loud, and now everyone is accustomed to awning stripes and colors, they look most attractive anywhere in the open.

Tailored velvet shapes are so much worn that they are apt to be overdone by Fall, yet designers all predict a velvet season later on and regard these as only the advance wave of the coming tide.
